

It was with disgust and disdain that I listened to a radio show today discussing Sinclair's intention to show a so-called "documentary" questioning John Kerry's military service in Vietnam. How can this possibly be permitted when the dangers of media consolidation stifling our democracy have just been an issue in recent legislation? Do you think people do not pay attention? Is this the same Broadcasting company that refused to air the roll call of our fallen soldiers fighting in Iraq? It is still more suspect that the stations are being required to preempt their regular programming to air this partisan documentary.

Sinclair is clearly violating the public trust by airing its own agenda at public cost. This is an egregious example of corporate control over the flow of objective information to the public. I cannot believe the audacity of Sinclair to attempt such an outrageous agenda in the wake of public outcry over the dangers of media consolidation. It shows how toothless this democracy has become; they aren't concerned in the slightest about their license renewal, are they?

I hope you take these concerns into consideration, and I thank you for your attention.
